"More Than This Color" is a pop art and cubist inspired piece that I created over the summer. I was having a particularly hard time being a woman of color at Dartmouth who didn't have a lot of friends and didn't fit into the elitist predominantly white circles. I used a variety of colors for my skin to represent the versatility of blackness and made my cornrows green because I had felt self-conscious about my natural hair all summer, but took this chance to make it pop and represent my hair as how I've come to see it.
