Firefly Heaven

imagine a future where your story never ends, biosphere and technosphere merge, cybernetic wilderness surges over the Earth, implanting joy into spiderminds, bioinorganic bundles lacing among fungal mycelia, singing to fireflies as you gaze through their ommatidia, processing insect sensory data in your distributed exocortex, you find yourself caught on a cobweb, but your firefly has nothing to fear, she transmits her soul into your orbital brain and goes on living, firefly heaven is a beautiful place, perhaps you'll visit tonight, after you engineer novel love-architectures, after you construct a mechanized Neptune to write ninety-septillion poems per attosecond, after you read them all at once, after you climb Olympus Mons, after you reconfigure your many bodies into flowers with sensors oriented towards the evening stars, you'll join your firefly in heaven as you circle the world.
