The Burn

After a poem by Galway Kinnell

Years ago I came here after the lightning burn.
Now I come alone
in search of spruce hens hidden in the tender growth.
I go deep
into your singed forest of birch and spruce
whose roots once drank
from the blue waters
of rainbow trout.
And resting on a burnt log among lupine and larkspur, I see in the ashes
beside the fireweed
a single wild rose.
