Another Goodbye

I sit at the kitchen table, the sun to my back writing my son's obituary.

Why should I not be proud? Life is risk.

He loads his car heavy with ropes and crampons, strange shards of metal.

This is what I prayed for. Find your passion in God's great world.
The stars, the wind.

Tomorrow we plan a birthday dinner and hear stories of how he slept in the snow.

Look: a picture of our son on a mountain. The clouds beneath him, ice axes spread like bone wings.

"I started reading Appalachia for the accident reports, but I kept reading for the great features."—Mohamed Ellozy, subscriber
