December at the Ocean's Crest

Under the twelfth moon the sea is lugging snows of foam that drop and slide, each roll of froth a chilled shore hugging.

Not the summer linen moon but the winter wool, rough light threaded through clouds showing its wet luster longer than the sun, and seems with the sea, on the edge of the end.

Neither rests! Two prodigious bodies laboring in heaves and sighs offering the heavy wisdom of ocean, and of night.
